Population Control Children are a Blessing

Continuing the discussion with older children –

In the world today there are many concerns. Some of these concerns center around the family, and in particular whether or not to bring children into the world. Fears of overpopulation, food shortages, and climate change bring this question to the forefront: will children destroy the world, or are they a blessing?

Mother Teresa, a missionary to India who cared for many orphaned children, once asked, "How can there be too many children? That is like saying there are too many flowers."

Take a look at these images. Each flower in the photographs adds a unique beauty and helps to make the world a better place. They each work together to share their beauty with us. Children are the same. Each child has unique talents and strengths; they bring beauty, joy, and innovation into our world. Contrary to popular belief, many countries are in a state of depopulation; adults are having too few children.

We need to make a return as individuals and societies to the knowledge that each child is valuable and treasured because of the intrinsic gifts they bring to the world.

Throughout this unit, we will discuss these concerns and discover how children are not only a blessing, they are also the answer to many problems facing societies and countries today. We will learn about the proper role of government and why policies restricting the population (how many babies are born) are harmful to individuals, communities, and societies. In order for freedom and families to thrive, the power of government must be limited to its true purpose, protecting our God-given rights. We will also discuss issues arising from the decline in fertility (how many children each woman will have during their lifetime). We will discover ways we can all help the environment and make the world a better place. Said simply, we will discuss why children won't destroy the planet but are part of the solution to save it.
